

Heisey's Early Patterns

Cut Block No. 1200

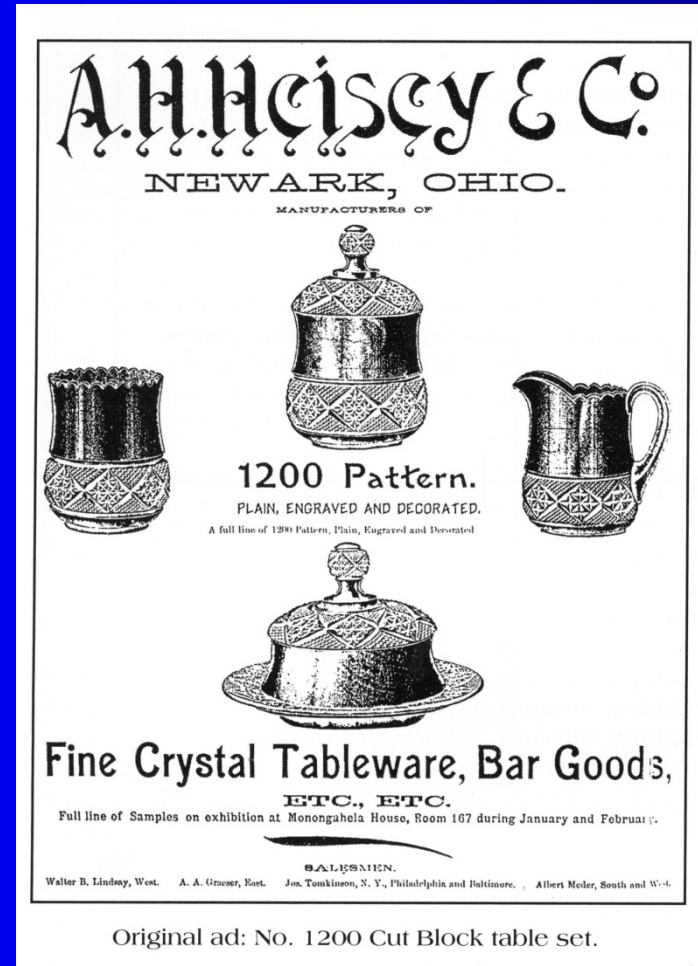

- This is considered to be Heisey's second pattern.
- Ruth Webb Lee includes this pattern in her book on Victorian Glassware and calls it Cut Block.
- Clarence Vogel referred to the pattern as Square in Diamond Point.
- In an early catalog, Heisey Co. referenced this pattern as #1200 Ware. In a later catalog which is undated (circa late 1900 or 1901) they use the number 170.
- Minnie Watson Kamm, in her Sixth Picture Book refers to it simply as Heisey's No. 1200.

Heisey's Early Patterns

- One of Heisey's first advertisements in the trade journals featured #1200 Cut Block.
- Ad at right appeared in January 1, 1896 issue of China, Glass and Lamps
- Shown in ad is four piece set: covered butter, spoon, cream, and covered sugar.

Cut Block No. 1200

- “This pattern was produced primarily in crystal, and so far, no crystal piece has been found signed with the Diamond H trademark.” - Loren Yeakley
- “One finds the individual cream and sugar in custard (ivorina verde), usually decorated as a souvenir item.” - Loren Yeakley
- According to Neila Bredehoft, the toothpick holder, the individual creamer, the tumbler and a plate have been seen with ruby stain decoration.
- Tom Bredehoft has noted that gold application was applied to the No. 1200 Line tumblers.
- “No pieces have been found in any other color than custard.” - Loren Yeakley.

Heisey's Early Patterns

Cut Block No. 1200

- Cut Block is a very plain pattern with just an ornate band around the body, which resembles a row of diamonds filled with fine-cut. The remainder of the band is filled with diamond points.
